Makhana (Fox Nut)

Makhana, also known as fox nuts or lotus seeds, are the seeds of the Euryale ferox plant, which is native to India and commonly found in the state of Bihar. Makhana has been used in traditional Indian medicine and cuisine for centuries. Makhana is highly nutritious and offers several health benefits. Some Health Benefits are Low in Calories, Rich in Antioxidants, High in Fiber, Protein-Rich, Anti-Aging Properties, Anti-Inflammatory, Heart Health, Supports Bone Health. Makhana is versatile and can be used in various ways in cooking: Roasted Makhana, Makhana Kheer, Makhana Curry, Makhana Namkeen, Salads.

Oil Cake

Oil cake is a byproduct of oil extraction from seeds, and it has many uses, including as a protein supplement and fertilizer.

Oil cake or solid residue refers to the solid material left behind after extracting oil from various oilseeds or nuts.

Both edible and non-edible oil cakes can be used as manures. However, edible oil cakes are fed to cattle and non-edible oil cakes are used as manures especially for horticultural crops. Nutrients present in oil cakes, after mineralization, are made available to crops 7 to 10 days after application.
